IN REPLY REFER TO:

To Whom It May Concern:

Sean Murphy worked for the American Conservation Corps as a corps member field staff here at Rocky Mountain National Park, Trails Department. In the many weeks I supervised Sean this summer, we developed a trustworthy professional and personal relationship. It was clear at the very beginning that Sean came to Rocky Mountain National Park ready and willing to learn as much as possible about trails and working in a backcountry setting. Sean's technical knowledge of trail maintenance grew every day and he continually asked to be challenged to learn more for his own benefit.

Sean has the potential to take forward your company and anything else he sets his mind to. I believe he displays a modest confidence that assures all concerns towards an activity or responsibility will be handled completely. Among many of his strengths are interpersonal and communication skills, solid leadership, and personal interest in all activities. Sean has sound physical conditioning and a dedicated work ethic to the projects he is working on.

I highly recommend Sean for a crew leader position in your program. Sean developed into a great well-rounded leader over this summer and showed keen insight into the group he was involved with. He is going to be an outstanding role model not only on the job, but in the corps members' lives as well. I would not hesitate to hire or work with Sean on any project.

Sincerely,

Michael Alexander
